

Building Block #8

Unless otherwise stated, a stitch is slipped as if to purl with yarn in back (wyib). This allows the slipped stitch to sit correctly on the right hand needle with the working yarn hidden on the wrong side.

In this block, however, all stitches are slipped as if to purl with the working yarn held in front (wyif). Moving the working yarn to the front as you slip the stitch makes for an interesting design element and is one of the “otherwise stated” exceptions to the slip stitch rule.

Because every stitch is not worked, slip stitch patterns are quick to knit. A slip stitch fabric is dense and is a good choice for garments where warmth is desired.

TIP: After slipping stitches, return working yarn to the knit position, taking care not to pull too tightly, so that an even tension is maintained.
